STATEMENT OF CULTURAL HERITAGE VALUE OR INTEREST

Description of Property

The property at 149 Dunn Street is located on the southeast side of Dunn Street between Sumner Avenue and Randall Street. The property contains a circa 1877 two-storey vernacular house built with influences from the Regency and Gothic Revival styles, known as Cedar Lodge.

Statement of Cultural Heritage Value or Interest

Design and Physical Value

Cedar Lodge has design and physical value as a representative example of an 1870s Oakville vernacular house with influences from the Regency and Gothic Revival styles. Prevalent in Ontario from 1830 to 1860, the Regency style was influenced by Indian temples and palaces and was adapted to meet the Ontario climate. The subject house originally included one of the more iconic details of this style, the front verandah with trellis-like supports which referenced the tropical villas of countries like India. The house also has influences from the Gothic Revival style, a style that incorporated different elements of the Gothic and medieval periods in England. Notable elements from the Ontario version of this style include the L-shaped form and massing of the original portion of the house, the simple gable roof design, the segmentally-arched 1/1 and 2/2 wood windows, the wide front porch, the bay window, and the front entrance with sidelights and transom window. The house exhibits design and features found on other vernacular homes in old Oakville and is a good representative example of a home built with influences from formal styles, but designed to fit the local climate and the needs of the homeowner.

Historical and Associative Value

Cedar Lodge has cultural heritage value for its connection to various well-known Oakville citizens, such as Charles and Mary Coote who built the house and owned the property for over 30 years. The Cootes owned and operated a general store, which still stands today on Lakeshore Road in downtown Oakville. The Cootes were well-known and involved citizens in late 19th and early 20th century Oakville and contributed to the early development of the town and its local commerce as businesspeople.

Contextual Value

Cedar Lodge has contextual value because it defines, supports, and maintains the character of Dunn Street and neighbouring streets. The house is located near two heritage conservation districts: Trafalgar Road Heritage Conservation District to the northeast, and Downtown Oakville Heritage Conservation District to the west. The house is surrounded by other heritage buildings and its presence maintains and supports the surrounding character neighbourhoods like downtown Oakville. The property is physically, visually, and historically linked to its surroundings. It is an entry point to downtown and remains in its original location, and contributes to the local streetscape. Because of the house's location on the corner lot, it is a visual anchor point of the neighbourhood and its history.

Description of Heritage Attributes

Key heritage attributes of Cedar Lodge at 149 Dunn Street that exemplify its cultural heritage value as an example of an Oakville vernacular house with influences from the Regency and Gothic Revival styles, as they relate to the historic two-storey house, include:

- Form and massing of the house with gable roofs, one-storey porch and bay window on west elevation;
- Lakestone foundation above grade;
- The presence of heavily textured traditional stucco cladding;
- Wooden soffits and fascia;
- One-storey front verandah with decorative square wooden columns and wooden bargeboard;
- Fenestration of windows on all elevations;
- Historic wooden windows, wooden window trim and wooden louvered shutters;
- Front entrance with wooden panelled door, sidelights with wooden panels and windows, wooden transom window and wooden trim; and
- Brick chimney.
